NEW BOOK SERIES

Reconstruction Reconsidered

Reconstruction Reconsidered, a new book series from the University of South Carolina Press, will explore new directions in the historiography of the Reconstruction era, focusing on work that expands our understanding of the period temporally, geographically, and thematically. The series will publish a rich variety of perspectives and methodologies, with the aim of better understanding this complicated and often-misunderstood period of our nation's history. The legacies of Reconstruction continue to shape so many of our contemporary debates about the nature of American citizenship and society, and this series will open a window into both our past and our present.

The University of South Carolina Press is a fitting home for a series exploring this vital period. Having played a central role in the Reconstruction project, South Carolina has helped shape the public memory of the era and preserve its history. Today the state is home to noteworthy landmarks, memorials, and institutes of higher learning that honor the era and support our ever-evolving conversations about race. Beaufort, South Carolina, hosts the Reconstruction Era National Park, established in 2017, as well as the Institute for the Study of the Reconstruction Era at the University of South Carolina Beaufort. The Press and the series editors are excited to pursue collaborative partnerships with these and other entities to enhance the reach of engaged scholarship that can speak to a broad audience.

Robert Smalls (1839–1915) was born into slavery in Beaufort, SC and became a South Carolina and United States legislator. Image courtesy of Wikimedia Commons.

SERIES EDITORS

J. Brent Morris is professor of history at Clemson University. His books include Dismal Freedom: A History of the Maroons of the Great Dismal Swamp, and Yes Lord, I Know the Road: A Documentary History of African Americans in South Carolina, 1528–2008.

Hilary N. Green is James B. Duke Professor of Africana Studies at Davidson College and the author of Educational Reconstruction: African American Schools in the Urban South, 1865–1890.

SUBMISSION GUIDELINES

WHAT WE PUBLISH

The University of South Carolina Press publishes original works of outstanding scholarship in print and digital formats in the fields of Southern history, African American studies, civil rights, rhetoric and communication, and literary studies. USC Press also publishes a dynamic list of regional general interest nonfiction titles addressing South Carolina and the American South.

Our publications vary in length and purpose, from scholarly digital shorts to research monographs and reference works to colorful and culturally rich coffee-table volumes. These offerings appeal to a range of audiences, including scholars, students, and the general public. All projects undergo rigorous external peer review and must be approved by the Press Committee before publication.

WHAT TO SUBMIT

To have your book proposal considered by USC Press, please include the following:

- A cover letter that briefly describes the work: title, scope, purpose, readership, course adoption potential, comparable publications, preliminary bibliography, projected word count, and projected date of completion. Explain what makes this work an original or otherwise compelling contribution to your field and why you are the appropriate person to write it. Also explain how the work fits into USC Press's publishing list and if it should be considered for a particular series. Please indicate if any parts of the work have been previously published.
- A table of contents, preferably with brief descriptions of each part and/or chapter.
- A list of images and illustrations, if those are planned. (Note that authors are required to secure permissions for all images and illustrations.)
- For partial or complete manuscripts, submit two representative chapters; do not submit the complete manuscript.
- A list of three scholars in your field competent to review your manuscript (do not include current or former colleagues or dissertation committee members). Include email addresses and affiliations and note if any have already read the work.
- Your current CV or résumé.

SUBMIT YOUR PROPOSAL

For projects in Southern history, African American studies, and civil rights, please submit a book proposal as a Word document to acquisitions editor Ehren Foley via the submissions form on our website: uscpress.com/Submission-Guidelines. Questions? Contact Ehren Foley at ehrenfoley@sc.edu or 803-777-9055.
